Subject: Request regarding court visit – Comparative analysis of taking evidence in court

Dear Professor [Last name],

I am writing about the paper “Comparative analysis of taking evidence in court”, due on 9 October 2026.

Unfortunately, I have not been able to find a criminal hearing near me that I could attend in person and that would be relevant to the assignment. There are no suitable proceedings in English, and the Portuguese criminal proceedings I looked into are not publicly recorded or documented online in enough detail to allow a proper analysis of how evidence is taken.

I would therefore like to ask whether I may base my paper on State of Minnesota v. Derek Chauvin (Hennepin County District Court, Minneapolis, USA, 2021). The entire trial was broadcast and recorded, so I can watch the hearings in full, including jury selection, the examination and cross-examination of witnesses, the expert testimony and the closing arguments. The court documents, including the jury instructions, are also publicly available. The case raises several evidentiary issues, such as video evidence, conflicting expert testimony on causation and the defendant’s right not to testify. I believe this would allow me to cover all the required topics and to compare the case with a continental system.

I would be grateful to know whether this would be acceptable, or whether you would prefer a different approach.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Kind regards,
